Course Description

The course Dilemmas in Counter-Terrorism Decision-Making will analyze the main dilemmas in Counter-Terrorism Decision-Making in different areas. Students will be introduced to these dilemmas in an innovative way: both by interaction with guest lecturers - former decision-makers and by writing together a synopsis for a script for a TV series that will present and analyze these dilemmas from an Israeli Perspective.
Course Goals

In the relatively new and constantly changing field of terrorism and counter-terrorism studies, it is critical to establish comprehensive understandings of phenomenon of terrorism and the options available to counter the phenomenon. Such analyses and insights should help policy makers and counter-terrorism officials develop more effective policies and practices in the campaign against terrorism.

Terrorism intentionally targets civilians while exploiting the freedom of liberal-democratic values. By doing so, it presents a far more difficult and complicated challenge to the decision makers and counter-terrorism experts. Effectively dealing with the phenomenon of terrorism must address several dilemmas. These dilemmas include offensive, preemptive, defensive and intelligence activities and should be followed by various actions; deterrence, punitive, legislative, and so on.

Israel has been used as a “case study” for its wide experience in the area of counter terrorism and dealing with the continuous threats of terrorism. As such, through guest speakers who are experts in different fields of counter-terrorism, frontal lectures, videos, class discussion and group writing, we will analyze these dilemmas and their potential responses together.
