

Sani Ziv

Sani Ziv is a Senior Research Fellow at the Aaron Institute for Economic Policy at Reichman University, where he leads the Transportation and Housing Research Program. He is also a lecturer in economics and finance at the Academic College of Tel Aviv–Yaffo.

Sani holds an M.A. in Economics with honors from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He is currently a Ph.D. candidate at Bar-Ilan University, where his research focuses on the economic implications of labor market mismatch. In addition, he serves as an external director on the boards of public companies.

Sani leads research projects in the fields of cost of living, housing, transportation, energy, productivity, and strategic planning for the Israeli economy. His work focuses on macroeconomic and microeconomic analysis, economic and regional impact assessments, market structure and regulatory analysis, and the formulation of public policy recommendations. He combines applied research, economic modeling, and advisory work for government ministries and public-sector organizations.